2020-2021 Annual Report

MISS
ISS
IPPI

Our story began 144 years ago when Governor John M. Stone signed legislation to establish Mississippi's Agricultural and Mechanical College. On that momentous February day in 1878, the promise of hope and a new direction for higher education in Mississippi—envisioned and championed by the institution's founders—became a reality.

Over the years, the vision of those founders has matured into an accessible, responsive and inclusive land-grant university that improves the lives of those it touches. While today's Mississippi State University certainly looks different than it did in its beginning, its core mission has held steadfast. The land-grant's foundational commitment to excellence in learning, research and service has provided avenues for exploration and enhanced perspectives that lead to lives of purpose. And throughout the university's history, it has guided a compelling narrative that continues to shape our world.

Despite the difficulties faced over the last 144 years, from war and depression to political adversity and a recent pandemic, Mississippi State endured and progressed. Such strength and triumph are not found in the physical establishment itself but in the hearts, stories and lives of the people who make up the university family. Alumni and friends like you are the sustainers, the believers and the authors of MSU's tomorrow.

The past is only a prologue, and each passing year marks the turning of a page, the beginning of a new chapter. As MSU's story—our story—continues to unfold, it becomes clear that a university is not a static, logically defined object, but rather it is an energetic and dynamic organism. It's not a place we briefly visit; it is an experience that shapes us and follows us throughout life. It's not simply acquired knowledge and major degrees and mentors; it is the spring of inspiration for causes and callings. It is a point of origin, an element of transference and a treasured homecoming in a lifelong journey.

Such an entity cannot be defined through the confines of text or singular perspectives. Nor can the tremendous outcomes and prosperity of its labor and offerings be fully expressed within the limited pages of a report such as this, no matter the depth or detail enclosed. The full measure of a university can only be conveyed through those who have experienced it for themselves.

The experiences of Bulldogs across generations serve as unique reflections of the defining moments and stunning leaps that have pushed MSU forward. Likewise, the deep-rooted affinity shared by alumni and friends of the university continues to kindle the current that unites and drives us toward a greater good.

Yet, much of what we have accomplished would not have been possible without the loyal support of donors like you. Your generosity is the bridge from present to future. It is breathing new life into an ever-changing narrative and crossing new thresholds into possibilities still unwritten. Together, we are shaping the landscape and future of the institution and further enriching the epic of Mississippi State.

Within the pages of this publication are three separate accounts that demonstrate the ways MSU continues to uphold its commitment to the three core areas of

LEARNING, RESEARCH AND SERVICE.

Each offers a unique perspective into distinct areas that make up the greater university. Although they are not comprehensive in telling the full impact of each endeavor, they are nevertheless a point of pride—single threads woven into the Mississippi State tapestry. And with the sharing of each story, the colors of our alma mater shine that much brighter.

As director of the Dr. A. Randle and Marilyn W. White Health Professions Resource Center (HPRC), Reese provides a personalized approach to every student to help them get into their health professional school of choice. From pre-dental to pre-nursing, the Dr. A. Randle and Marilyn W. White HPRC works with students to become competitive candidates within their chosen pre-health field.

“The health care market is in high demand,” said Reese. “Health professional schools are very competitive. It’s a stressful process, and sometimes students need someone encouraging and cheering them on along the way. I work with students on things like MCAT prep, best practices for writing a strong personal statement and skills that health care professional schools look for, like leadership, social competency and communication skills.”

Through the initial support of Dr. White, a 1966 MSU chemistry and pre-medicine graduate, and Mrs. White, the HPRC strengthens MSU's mission of learning and gives pre-health students an advantage as they prepare for their post-graduate programs. The Whites’ vision for a place where students could get the direction and guidance needed for them to be competitive and successful is fully alive.

“Dr. and Mrs. White generously provided much-needed resources that allowed us to hire more staff to give the valuable attention and support that every student needs,” said Reese. “We can now provide one-on-one advising and a personalized approach to assist each student, ensuring they are successful throughout their time at MSU while they reach their health care aspirations.”

The center also facilitates Doctor Dawgs, a program comprised of a diverse range of health professionals throughout the state who support students through shadowing opportunities, mock interviews, career advice, academic scholarships and even funds to cover test prep courses. With the help of the Doctor Dawgs, students never have to go without the necessary tools they need to get to the next step.

“Dr. and Mrs. White’s vision for HPRC has not only increased acceptance rates for MSU students, but it also has engaged alumni, promoting a growth in pre-health concentrations,” said Reese. “Their support has been key in encouraging others to get involved. Many alumni and supporters have assisted with endowed and annual scholarships, operating funds and service initiatives for students to continue preparing for their time after MSU.”

The Doctor Dawgs and the Dr. A. Randle and Marilyn W. White HPRC continue to grow as students successfully move on to their professional schools of choice. Reese is excited for the future as more students take advantage of the resources offered. She hopes to start seeing students begin working on their pre-health journey earlier on in their academic careers, and she is eager to continue expanding the Doctor Dawgs network.

“Doctor Dawgs is so important to the student experience,” said Reese. “MSU has produced so many successful doctors, dentists and many other health care professionals over the decades, and this network is important to help future Doctor Dawgs continue that success and influence. It continues to grow throughout the state, and we look forward to building a network beyond.”

ince joining the faculty in the College of Forest Resources, Mark McConnell gets a chance to put his passions for problem-solving and science to work every day. As an assistant professor of upland bird and prairie conservation, McConnell works with private landowners to research population restoration efforts for upland birds, primarily quail.

Although quail are generally a more high-maintenance species that require specific habitats to thrive, the southeastern native grasslands offer ideal nesting grounds. Large, wild coveys flourished, largely as a by-product of the small-scale farming practices, throughout the region from the 1940s through the 1970s. However, as agriculture became more industrialized and farms and forest production expanded, landscapes changed too much too quickly, leaving quail populations severely reduced.

McConnell and his team of graduate students are working to change that by restoring populations of bobwhite quail around Mississippi and the Mid-South. Their efforts to ask novel questions and pursue cutting-edge research in order to better understand the species' ecology and evaluate different techniques to increase population sizes are greatly enhanced through funding from two separate endowments—the Bryan-Burger Endowment for Bobwhite Habitat Restoration and the James C. Kennedy Endowment for Upland Game Bird Ecology.

“Most quail habitats occur on private land,” said McConnell. “With support from these endowments, we’re able to conduct some really cool research and offer practical tools and instruction that private landowners use to increase and better manage quail and other game bird populations on their properties.”

The combined commitments of the Bryan-Burger endowment, established by Jimmy and Kay Bryan of West Point in 2016, and the Kennedy endowment, created by its Atlanta-based namesake in 2020, provide new energy and resources to conduct long-term research for reliable results.

“Mississippi is not the quail-destination state it once was,” said McConnell. “But these endowments give us the flexibility to address that issue by asking more challenging questions over a longer period to collect data that fills a knowledge gap. Long-term research is what moves the needle on science and conservation, and private support is critical to sustain that type of work.”

Olivia Lappin, a graduate student from Scarborough, Maine, is working on specific northern bobwhite quail research thanks to the Bryan and Kennedy endowments. Working at Prairie Wildlife in West Point, Mississippi, Lappin focuses on bobwhite ecology during the breeding season by attaching radio collars and tracking the birds each day.

“The financial help was tremendous in obtaining the materials needed to carry out these tasks,” she said. “I was able to hire two undergraduate technicians to assist with fieldwork, allowing them to develop skills in wildlife research that they can take with them in their future career endeavors. I am very fortunate to receive private funding as I follow my passion for conserving wildlife in an ever-advancing and urbanizing world.”

Though they are just getting started in their research, McConnell and his team are excited to put MSU back on the map for quail research, thanks to those who are committed to supporting this research through their gifts.

“We want Mississippi State to once again become the premier program for quail research,” said McConnell. “The Bryan-Burger and Kennedy endowed programs can serve as models for quail and upland game bird research throughout the country.”

ncertain and limited access to food is an increasingly prevalent reality for many. It is estimated that one in five Mississippians currently faces hunger, and nearly 30 percent of college students face food and basic need insecurities around the U.S. When students at Mississippi State realized that there were no additional resources to help students combat food insecurities they may face, an idea came about for a place where students could turn to in their times of need.

Through collaborative efforts between the Division of Student Affairs and the Student Association, Bully's Closet and Pantry (BCP) was launched in January 2020 to provide nutritious food, toiletries, professional clothing, school supplies and other necessary items to current MSU students free of charge. And the timing couldn't have been more appropriate as the effects of the COVID-19 pandemic were simultaneously making their way to Mississippi and the MSU campus.

While the comprehensive resource offerings are an important asset to the campus community in all seasons, the program became an indispensable stronghold during the pandemic. Many students faced uncertainty in their jobs, coursework and futures, yet BCP, even in its infancy, succeeded in offering an outstretched hand of support in the most pressing times.

Private support from alumni and friends for valuable outreach and development efforts like BCP was the driving force behind Mississippi State's ability to adapt and persevere amid the pandemic. Today, many are returning to more "normal" routines as the fears and challenges associated with COVID-19 recede. However, food and resource insecurity remains a significant problem—one that MSU's BCP is ready to address.

"BCP is open to every student on campus," said Christen White, student services coordinator in the Dean of Students' Office. "We listen to students and take their feedback when things need to be added or adjusted for the betterment of the program. That feedback makes sure that we are offering the best service for Mississippi State students and allows students to see the direct effects of contributions made to the program."

Open three days a week for in-person shopping with the other two days dedicated to curbside pickup, every student can come to BCP for assistance, no matter their situation. The program reduces the burden of financial and food insecurities that students face every day thanks to the help of student volunteers, alumni support and other contributions.

"It would be extremely difficult to assist students without the support we receive from alumni and friends," said White. "It means so much more to a student to know that someone truly cares about the student's wellbeing. Every gift goes toward meeting the needs of students and making it possible for them to get to a place where they are food stable and able to thrive at MSU."

As the program continues to grow, White hopes students know where to turn in times of need from the moment they step foot on campus. She also hopes the positive effects of BCP will inspire students to get more involved and find new ways to support one another. Whether by volunteering, making a monetary contribution or donating extra food or clothing—everything counts at Bully's Closet and Pantry.

"I want students to know that MSU supports them if they're in need," said White. "I hope that every student knows about the program and how to access it. We are a true people's university where Bulldogs support other Bulldogs. BCP would not be where it is today without the support it receives."

MISSISSIPPI STATE UNIVERSITY FOUNDATION

Board of Directors for 2021

Alumni and friends.

All of us take pride in this institution, with its highly qualified and dedicated faculty, its host of alumni who put their resources where their hearts are, and its student body of young men and women who represent the university's accomplishments and potential.

We salute all those who have made gifts to support Mississippi State University during the 2020-2021 fiscal year. With support from over 20,000 alumni and friends, we closed a record year with a total of $120.7 million. Thank you for igniting the highest giving year outside of a campaign initiative in school history and continuing to raise the bar with the eighth consecutive year of gifts exceeding the $100 million benchmark.

Moreover, the unmatched level of support during FY 20-21 was met with a record 35.8 percent investment return. As a result, the university's endowment grew by an astounding $178 million.

The multiplying effect of this engagement and support benefits every aspect of the university and affirms our commitment to making the world a better place through excellence in learning, research and service. As we continue to empower students and faculty to push the limits of knowledge and celebrate our progress toward realizing these ideals, we must also recognize there is still much we can do, much we can learn and much we can contribute.

Your passionate commitment to Mississippi State sustains our momentum and will help pave the way for untold achievements and discovery in the future. We are deeply grateful for your support. On behalf of the entire university family, thank you for helping to make a difference today while setting the stage for tomorrow's story.

WHITE!

MAROON AND
WHITE!
OF THEE WITH JOY WE SING;

Every gift begins with a story—a personal purpose for giving back. Maybe it is the opportunity to improve a student’s life, the passion to see one’s alma mater flourish or the desire to fuel cutting-edge research that improves the world beyond. Regardless of the reason or inspiration, gifts to Mississippi State are like wells of ink overflowing with hopeful narratives for future generations of leaders and scholars to pursue.

With praise our ces ring.

Thank you for helping us bring to life one of the greatest stories the world will ever know, from right here in the heart of Mississippi.
